SPRING.

In vain I tempt the wanted stave: Of maids and mirth I may not sing, Nor catch the music of the Spring: I only know the sleeping brave.

REJ !

While births are springing thick around Of Nature's Summer drapery, No part is beautiful to me Save what e'erlays some hero's mound.

For me they fell; should not for them 1, living, sing-for them alone! Can theme more worthy e'er be shown Than death with glory's diadem?

Nay, Spring, thou bringest only woe Where er'st though brought'st heart-filling joy; For who but hath some darling boy Or love-friend lost before the foe?

On breasts, where once the jewel rose Like pertling infant joyed to rest, The cypress is alone con Nor rise they as they one time rose

With laughter ringing through the dell; With sorrow-sobs each besom heaves; Sad changed to fairest heavenly enves, Catching the tears from the deep heart-well.

Nor mothers teach their babes the notes Of birdie at the bowered door, But hum some battle-ballad o'er. Or tale of forts and men-filled moats

Nay, nay, young spring -once fair to See-We may not praise thy beauty here: A beauty is than thine more dear-The beauty of slain bravery!

THE RECRUIT.

From a life with thee, dear mother, To the field by war notes deep, I am summoned to far other-And thou seest me but to weep. Mountain, vale and wild unbroken Well I know to pass unburt--Mother, be the wish but spoken, Mother dear-and I desert!"

" Be it far from thee forever, Thus to grieve me, 0 my son! A deserter! never, never! As to me, God's will be done. But, dishonered, boy, beware thee! Now, 0 son of mine, I have thee For thy country, not for me!"

-From the Italian.

GOOD-BYE .- Fervently, falteringly, tearfully, how many times it has been said, since they went out of Egypt, of old .-There is a tone in the word, like the tone of an evening bell, a great way off, very sweet but very sad. "Farewell". may do may be something a lttle grander about it, but then "good-bye" is a dear, homely word, that we must all keep in the homestead, for so it is ordained, but only used in its full significance three orfour times in the course of a life. And all it means is a clerks good going, a single Saxon wish, but what more can we say, or what matter if we could. Were "adieu" only our tongue; if only we had heard it when we were young; our dear old mothers had said it, and knew precisely what it meant, "adieu" would be the word; for in its to God is comprised everything we can do, whose arms of love cannot encircle the world.

THE HERC'S GRAVE.—A few days since we visited the grave of Gen. Nathaniel of the count shall be replaced in the ballot box which Lyon, in Eastford, Conn. The sad, solitary old burial ground looked sadder, gloomier than ever, beneath the pall of winter. Some the day following that of any election the judges shall de kindly hand had covered the grave with ev- liver the ballot-boxes and poll-books to the city clert, at his ergreen boughs, prior to the fall of snow, and these were straggling up through the fleecy robe, tossed to and fro by the sullen wind, which piped its low and dirge-like tones as the soldier's requiem. Poor Lyon! He gave every thing for his country. Let the country give him a . fitting monument .- Woonsocket Patriot.
